

Lesson 15

Material prepared by Patricio Arnaldi T.

A. In pairs, decide if the negotiating tips are true (T) or false (F). If you think a tip is false, correct the statement.

1. Create a list of 'must-have goals' and 'nice-to-have goals' before you start.
2. When you meet the other party for the first time, never give compliments or make positive comments.
3. Ask members of the other party personal questions about their family, free time or job to help build a personal relationship.
4. Agree to some suggestions by the other party without asking for anything in return.
5. Confirm all the terms of the agreement before finalising it.
6. Send a personal thank-you email to the other party afterwards.

B. Match the stages of a negotiation with the useful language.

Stage of a Negotiation	Useful Language
1. Planning: Decide on your goals and the most important points for the negotiation, such as price, quality, delivery schedule, and how long the contract will last.	a. Could you provide more details on...?
2. Opening the negotiation: At the beginning of the meeting, clearly say the goal of the negotiation and talk about the main topics. Also, clearly state your hoped-for result.	b. To sum up, we've agreed to...
3. Information exchange: Exchange information and learn more about each others' abilities and needs.	c. I want to share our progress on our recent agreement.
4. Suggesting and negotiating: Present your starting suggestions about key conditions such as price, quantity, delivery schedules. Listen to the supplier's suggestions and negotiate to find solutions.	d. What do we think are the key points we should focus on?
5. Closing the negotiation: Summarise the key points of the agreement and confirm that you both understand them.	e. We are prepared to... In return, we would like you to...
6. Follow-up: Continue regular communication with the other party to deal with any problems or changes in needs.	f. Our main goals for this negotiation are...

Language at work | First and second conditionals

- 1 If you need to make an important decision at work or in your personal life, do you talk to other people first? Which people usually give you good advice?
- 2 Read this email from Ilse, a business owner, to Jeff, a consultant, and answer the questions.
 - What decision does Ilse have to make?
 - What are her options?
 - What advice do you think Jeff will give her?

Dear Jeff,

I'm writing to you to ask for your expert advice. We've got the opportunity to relocate our computer games shop to a new out-of-town shopping centre. If we move, we'll probably have a larger base of potential (and wealthy) customers.

However, there is a downside. If we don't keep our shop in town, we may lose our current customers who are local students without cars. I don't think they'll travel all the way to the new premises. Obviously, if we had more money, we'd keep the shop in town and open up at the shopping centre too, but that's not a realistic option.

We'd greatly appreciate it if you could advise us on this matter.

Many thanks and best wishes,

Ilse

First and Second conditionals

LANGUAGE POINT

- a If we move, we'll probably have a larger base of potential customers.
- b If we don't keep our shop in town, we may lose our current customers.
- c If we had more money, we'd keep the shop in town.

1 First conditional: if + present simple, will/may/might/can + infinitive

We use the first conditional to talk about possible future situations.

2 Second conditional: if + past simple, would/could + infinitive

We use the second conditional to talk about an imaginary or unreal situation that is improbable or impossible.

C. Complete the sentences using the first conditional and the verbs in brackets.

1. you (send) your order by email, we (deliver) the goods today.
2. you (buy) me lunch, I (help) you with your presentation.
3. We (cancel) our order you (not / deliver) the packages by Friday.
4. your prices, (be / competitive) we (place) an order.
5. You (get) more sales you (update) the website.
6. he (wait) a moment, I (call) him.
7. She (arrive) on time she (leave) now.
8. Max (attend) the meeting, he (understand) the project better.
9. I (read) the report I (have) time.
10. Katie (get) the flu, she (call) in sick.

D. Match the first conditional sentence halves and write out the complete sentences.

I'll pay for lunch
if it rains
If you pay for dinner
The football match will be cancelled
if she invites them

If you don't drive carefully
They will go to the party
she won't forgive you
you will have an accident
If you don't apologise

2.
3.
4.

Buyer Role-Play Card

Your company manufactures goods. Your partner's company is a supplier. You want to develop a good relationship with the supplier, but your goal is to get the best deal for your company. In addition, your company is growing and needs more materials to increase production. You want a good price per unit, quick delivery, and high-quality materials from the supplier.

Key information:

- You want to order 11,000 units a month from the supplier.
- You want a 10% discount in unit price for orders over 1,000 units.
- Delivery must be within ten business days of making an order.
- Materials must have an ISO 9001 certificate.

Do the following:

- First, greet your partner.
- Next, ask for information about the supplier's quantities, delivery time, and quality certificate.
- After that, suggest your goal for price and negotiate it with the supplier.
- Finally, summarise the key points of the agreement and thank the supplier.

Supplier Role-Play Card

Your company supplies materials to other companies. Your partner's company is a potential customer. You want to develop a good relationship with your customer, but your goal is to increase your profits. In addition, your company has a lot of customers, so you do not want to promise a very quick delivery time.

Key information:

- You can produce up to 10,000 units a month for your customer.
- It takes two weeks to deliver materials after ordering.
- You can offer a 5% discount on the unit price for orders over 1000 units.
- Your materials have an ISO 9001 certificate.

Do the following:

- First, greet your partner.
- Next, answer your customer's questions about delivery times, quality levels, and discounts.
- After that, negotiate with your customer.
- Finally, confirm the key points of the agreement and end the negotiation with a promise to continue the relationship into the future.
