Topic Sentence

A good topic sentence must have a focus that is neither too vague nor too specific.

Too vague: Athletes eat a healthy diet.

This topic sentence needs a clear controlling idea to give it a more specific focus. We don't get a clear idea of the writer's position on the topic. For example, do they believe this is a positive thing or a negative thing?

Too specific: Athletes on average consume 3000 calories per day.

This sentence reads more like a detail that develops a supporting idea and should be in the body of the paragraph.

Effective: Athletes have particular dietary requirements that support high performance levels.

This is an effective topic sentence because it indicates what the content of the paragraph is about without giving the actual details.

A. Read the topic sentences below and indicate whether they are too vague 'V', too specific 'S', or if they are effective 'E'.

 Identifying topic sentences

Write 4 supporting sentences for the following main idea: “People lie for different reasons”.

Point: People lie for different reasons

```
graph TD; A((To avoid hurt feelings)) --- B((To avoid a fight)); B --- C((To avoid spending time with someone)); C --- D((To fit in)); D --- A;

To avoid a fight

To avoid spending time with someone

To avoid hurt feelings

To fit in

The text can be organized as it follows:

People lie for different reasons. One common reason is to avoid hurting someone's feelings. For example, a friend might ask, "Do you like my new haircut?" If you think it's ugly, you might still answer something like, "I really do". Another common reason for lying is to avoid a fight. If a friend says something you don't like and then he asks: "Are you upset with me?" You might answer, "No", to avoid an argument. People also lie so that they will fit in, as when you listen to a boring person and politely say, "That's so interesting." Finally, people lie to avoid spending more time with someone. For instance, you might lie, "I have to go now".

A. Read the paragraph and complete the outline below. Only write keywords and phrases, not complete sentences.

Globalisation can be categorised into three types. The first of these is economic globalisation, which is the interdependence of countries through trade in such things as, goods, services, and technology. For example, Apple, which is an American company, sources the parts for its iPhones from places as diverse as Korea, Japan, and Singapore, and manufactures its phones primarily in China. Political globalisation is another type. This can be best understood through the growth of intergovernmental organisations since the end of World War II, which includes the United Nations, the World Bank, and the International Monetary Fund. A final category of globalisation is cultural, which involves the movement and sharing of ideas, values, and consumption and lifestyle choices. Cultural globalisation is best exemplified through popular culture and fashion with certain fashion brands and musical styles having universal appeal across cultures. In summary, when trying to understand globalisation we can examine it through the lenses of economics, politics, and culture.
